Hillman Minx Phase II Drophead Coupe

The Hillman Phase Minx Utility (Estate)

History:

The monocoque Minx Phase I was revealed in September 1939 and was sold in limited numbers to civilians during the early years of the war as a family sedan that was moderately priced. In November 1942, Rootes was confined to manufacturing military machinery suspending all civilian vehicle production. About 10,000 Phase I vehicles sold during this period. In the summer of 1945, Rootes was able to start up civilian deliveries once again of the popular saloon; however, very few could afford a new vehicle.

The Phase II was introduced in December 1947 when the front end was restyled to incorporate the headlamps into bulbous wings and fitted with a synchromatic steering-column gear shift. The cable brake system had been replaced by hydraulics during 1947.

By 1948, however, this type of Minx was beginning to look distinctly old-fashioned; it was replaced by the true postwar generation car, the Loewy-styled Minx III now referred to as the Series Minx.
